An Evening Echo.

Excessive wealth is neither glory nor happiness; the cold and sordid wretch who thinks only of himself, who draws his head within his shell and never puts it out but for the purpose of lucre and ostentation, who looks upon his fellow-creatures not only without sympathy but with arrogance and insolence, as if they were made to be his vassals and he to be their lord, as if they were made for no other purpose than to pamper his avarice, such a man might be rich, but, trust me, he can never be happy, nor virtuous, nor great.—W. WERT.

What a row Senator Martine could have by repeating his Charleston conduct in Paterson, N. J., his own state!

As Senator Martine denies that he was heavily drunk at Charleston, he should say just how drunk he was, if he was sober enough to know.

Martine cocktails are not popular with men who desire to retain their sanity but they may be good for mosquito bites.

President Wilson in his address to Congress shows the same attitude toward banking as he does toward American industry—to tear it down rather than build it up.

The Preston News hopes Charles D. Elliott will not be reappointed adjutant general of the state and it wants to know how the Telegram stands as to Col. Pierce. Give this newspaper a Bond and it will answer.

Democratic statesmen are very busy these days trying to make a compound of some kind out of the tariff and the currency system. The mixing of the currency system into free trade fluid is likely to make a deadly poison to American industry and thrift. American prosperity should better not touch the stuff.

Sulzer and Murphy have fallen out again through the public press. They have played the trick so often that most people think they are secretly embracing now and congratulating one another on how they are fooling the public again. If they are really at the outs, they will have to do more than they ever have done to prove it.

That so-called message of the president to Congress was almost wholly in the nature of a speech, and not a message at all. The president doubtless realized this fact as he entitled it an address. There was absence of recommendation except an appeal to Congress to enact a currency law already framed by him and members of Congress. The address merely hints at ills without remedies and contains nothing of value to currency students nor to the general public. It was just a sly way of telling a Democratic Congress to pass a bill already prepared and having the approval of the president.

Father and Son.

Hammett relates that a kind-hearted English gentleman once said to him: "My father was the most thoroughly unbearable person I ever met in my life."

That gives us a glimpse of one of the most tragic situations of modern life: the father and son who constantly irritate one another.

As the boy emerges from childhood and begins to develop his own personality, the father often finds it impossible to adjust himself to the change. They drift into alienation.

Impotent, or unwilling, to control his son, he falls back into sarcasm, sneering, contempt. Then this the boy, when not openly insolent, becomes sullen.

The only remedy for this sort of thing, says Dr. Frank Crane in Woman's World for July, is for the father to frankly recognize the individuality of the son, to seek to deal with him as an equal to treat him with respect, and, when the boy comes to grief by his unwisdom to seize that opportunity make him see his folly.
Only good, strong, repeated doses of love and companionship, administered with self-restraint, can solve the problem.

Another Ballinger.

Is there another Ballinger in the cabinet?
The question is worthy of thought.
But recently Judge Harold Ritz, district attorney of the United States court for the Southern district of West Virginia, was called to account because the federal grand jury acted on charges against certain men and returned indictments without the previous knowledge of United States Attorney General McReynolds. In that instance it looked as if the attorney general would stay the hands of the court in its carrying out the criminal statutes.

And, now the public has something far worse. By order of the attorney general there is a "fatal delay" in justice in California and a United States district attorney has wired his resignation to the president of the United States as a result. Indeed, there are two "fatal delays" there, as shown by the district attorney, John L. McNab, wired the president as follows:

"I am ordered by the attorney general over my protest, to postpone until autumn the trials of Maury Diggs and Andrew Caminetti, indicted for a hideous crime, which has ruined two girls and shocked the moral sense of the people of California, and this after I have advised the department of justice that attempts have been made to corrupt the government witnesses, and friends of the defendants are publicizing the prominence of the defendants' official prominence of the defendants' relatives will procure my hand to be stayed through influence at Washington."

"In these cases two girls were taken from cultured homes, bullied and frightened in going to a foreign state and were ruined and debauched by the defendants who abandoned their wives and infants to commit the crime."

"On receipt of the attorney general's telegram I prepared my resignation to take effect at the conclusion of the trials of the Western Fuel directors and the J. C. Wilson stockholders' cases, both of which I had instituted. Before I could send my resignation I received another telegram from the department ordering me to postpone the case against certain defendants of the Western Fuel Company and not to try them unless ordered by the department."

"In bitter humiliation of spirit I am compelled to acknowledge what I have heretofore indignantly refused to believe, namely, that the department of justice is yielding to influence which will cripple and destroy the usefulness of this office."

The men charged with gross violation of the moral laws of society are backed by strong political influence upon which they rely together with resort to bribery of witnesses. That is made plain. Also the Western Fuel Company is charged with defrauding the federal government of customs duties on imported coal through a conspiracy.

Mr. McNab's telegram is very positive and it conveys the idea that successful prosecutions depend upon immediate action.

But it is disclosed in press dispatches that Caminetti is a son of A. Caminetti, recently appointed commissioner general of immigration by President Wilson. Diggs is a nephew of former Senator Marshall Diggs, of California, and is a man of wealth and strong political connections. The two are charged with having violated the Mann white slave act in eloping to Reno, Nev., and with two young Sacramento girls. Diggs and Caminetti have wives and families.

In addition the Western Fuel Company is a powerful organization and the attorney general's intervention as to it operates in favor of it.

There is a striking similarity in the actions of Ballinger in the cabinet and McReynolds in the Wilson cabinet in respect to the big interests, but in the white slave case McReynolds's actions put Ballinger's in the shade.

Such popular clamor as went up against Ballinger should be as strong against McReynolds in the final case and so much stronger in the white slave case as to be without limit.

If the men accused of ruining the girls are guilty and are allowed to escape punishment, there will be a scandal in the Wilson cabinet the most appalling and horrifying in the history of the nation.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS SAY

Is This a Hint?
Why not become ecstatic over a flower or a star, instead of over a brand of whiskey?—Parkersburg State Journal.

Also Democratic Rules.
"Wholesale prices of commodities rising," reports the United States bureau of labor statistics, and vacation time is here.—Morgantown New Dominion.

Why Martine Is Senator.
Senator Martine is still talking. We begin to understand why New Jersey keeps Martine in office. He helps them forget Paterson.—Parkersburg Sentinel.

New Danger.
The arrest of a man for non-support of a Wheeling woman claiming to be his wife, whom he had never seen before, discloses a new danger confronting men who look like other men.—Wheeling Register.

There Will Be Anyway.
Owing to the fact that clothes will not be half worn out when the summer ends, there will have to be some radical changes in style next season to sell new goods.

On a Par.
Kiser's poetic caricature of West Virginia ought to elicit extravagant praise from the New York World. It is just about of a piece with the World's calibre of thinking—since Pulitzer's death.—Charleston Gazette.

About There Now.
If Senator Martine would cultivate executive rather than senatorial or judicial preference, he might, in time, become a fair rival of Governor Cole Bleasie, of South Carolina.—Huntington Herald-Dispatch.

Where Was the Song?
The Dispatch-News looked in vain in the various accounts of the semi-centennial celebration for some word about the reception that was accorded the state song, which had been heralded as one of the great features of a truly great occasion. But the reporters managed to gloss over the matter adroitly, managed to skip from number to number on a busy program without embarrassing reference to the state's $1,000 worth of condemned music and poetry, and it appears generally not to have been missed.—Parkersburg Dispatch-News.

The Trouble with Martine.
The plain fact is that Senator James E. Martine, of New Jersey, representative of the United States Senate, clothed with the dignity and authority of the United States government, charged with the performance of a solemn and important duty, was drunk, shamefully, disgracefully, beastly and scandalously drunk, unable to give judicial attention to the affairs of the commission, unable to comport himself with the dignity and decency worthy of his office, and absolutely unable to form any correct opinion of the conditions existing in the West Virginia coal fields, or anywhere else.—Wheeling Intelligence.

Fellowship in Advertisements

Merchants and manufacturers have certain articles they wish to sell. In order to sell them they advertise.

"That is their business," you say; "they are doing it to benefit themselves." True, they are advertising primarily for their own profit. But there is more to present-day advertising than that. It has created a spirit of confidence and friendliness between the seller and the buyer that has become so much a part of our daily lives that we hardly realize it unless we stop to think.

Have you ever made a purchase in the Orient? If so, you remember how you have entered a shop and after poking through confused heap of articles you have found something that struck your fancy. You asked the price and were told it was worth, perhaps, the equivalent to a dollar. Then ensued haggling, harranguing, threats, imprecations, until finally at the end of a half an hour you triumphantly emerged from the shop, the article in your hand and 50 cents gone from your pocket. When you looked again at your purchase you good, common sense told you it was worth about 10 cents.

Contrast such an experience with shopping here today. You will appreciate as never before the value of THE TELEGRAM'S advertisements, which lead you to firms known for their honest goods and their fair dealings.
